WORLDS APART ON REGULATING THE AI REVOLUTION

From academia to the arts, in music, movies, other audio and visual productions, and just about every facet of society, the impact of AI is a pervasive presence. And it's just getting started.

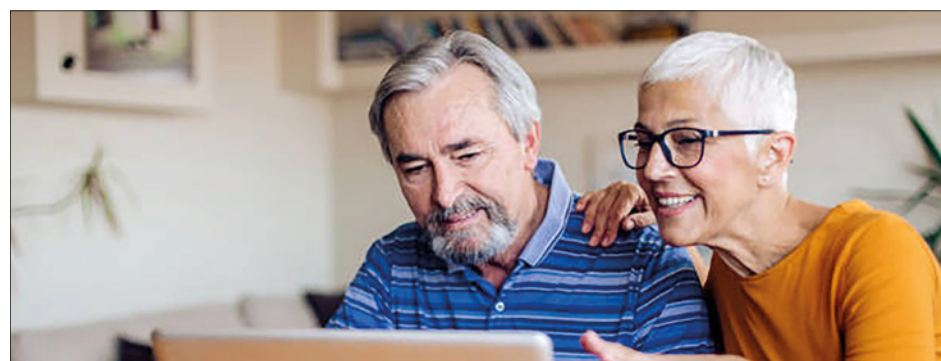

AI (artificial intelligence) is being completely embraced on the one hand while being cautiously handled on the other. At the same time, it's feared as a terrifying and uncontrollable incursion and assault on human ingenuity...the same human ingenuity which created it. It's now being reported that some aspects of AI technology are even self-generating and autonomous in decision-making.

That speaks to the all-embracing, multi-faceted tentacles of this technological revolution which is quite unlike

Recharge Your Body: Why Rest Is One of the Best Fitness Strategies

What most people think about improving their health, they picture early morning workouts, sweaty gym sessions, healthy meals, and pushing themselves to do more.

Very few people think about rest.

Yet rest is one of the most powerful—and often overlooked—ingredients of lasting health and fitness.

Whether you're planning a tropical getaway, a mountain retreat, or simply enjoying a staycation at home, taking time to recharge isn't a luxury. It's an investment in your physical health, mental well-being, and long-term fitness success.

The Secret Ingredient to Better Results

Getting fit certainly requires commitment, consistency, and hard work. But your body doesn't become stronger during your workout—it becomes stronger while it recovers from it.

Every workout places stress on your muscles, joints, and nervous system. During periods of rest, your body repairs damaged muscle fibers, restores energy stores, balances hormones, and prepares you to perform even better the next time you exercise.

Without adequate recovery, progress eventually slows—and may even reverse.

The healthiest people understand that balance wins every time. They know when to push hard and when to slow down.

What Happens When You Don't Rest?

Many motivated people believe that more exercise automatically means better results. Unfortunately, that's not always true.

Here are three common consequences of overtraining:

1. Burnout

Working out every day without allowing yourself to recover can drain both your body and your motivation.

At first, you may feel energized. But over time, your enthusiasm fades, workouts begin to feel like a chore, and skipping the gym becomes increasingly tempting.

One of the earliest warning signs of burnout is when you start dreading workouts you once enjoyed.

Fitness should challenge you—not make you miserable.

2. Increased Risk of Injury

Exercise creates tiny microscopic tears in your muscles. This is completely normal and is actually how your body becomes stronger.

However, those muscles need time to repair.

If you continually train without adequate recovery, those small injuries accumulate. Instead of becoming stronger, your body becomes more vulnerable to strains, tendon problems, joint pain, and overuse injuries that can keep you out of the gym for weeks—or even months.

Recovery is not weakness.

Recovery is part of the training process.

3. Lower Energy and Poorer Performance

Overtraining doesn't just affect your workouts—it affects your entire life.

When your body is constantly exhausted, everything becomes harder.

You may notice:

- Lower energy throughout the day
- Difficulty concentrating
- Poor sleep quality
- Irritability
- Reduced productivity at work
- Less patience with family and friends

A healthy body should help you enjoy life—not leave you feeling worn out.

Make Your Vacation Truly Restorative

Daily relaxation is important, but taking a real vacation can provide an even greater reset for your mind and body.

Whether you're traveling across the world or enjoying time at home, give yourself permission to slow down.

You don't have to spend every vacation checking emails, catching up on chores, or sticking to an intense workout schedule.

Sometimes the healthiest thing you can do is simply rest.

Here are a few ways to make your vacation work for your health:

Relax by the Water

Whether it's the beach, a swimming pool, a lake, or a quiet river, being near water has a naturally calming effect. Spend time reading, listening to music, or simply enjoying the peaceful surroundings.

Catch Up on Sleep

Vacation is the perfect opportunity to allow your body to recover from weeks or months of busy schedules.

If you naturally sleep a little longer, don't feel guilty.

Quality sleep supports muscle recovery, strengthens your immune system, improves mood, and boosts mental performance.

Avoid the Crowds

Crowded attractions, traffic, and long lines can quickly turn a relaxing holiday into a stressful one.

Whenever possible, visit popular attractions during quieter hours. You'll enjoy the experience more and return home feeling refreshed instead of exhausted.

Stay Active—But Keep It Fun

You don't need to abandon movement completely while you're away.

Instead of intense workouts, enjoy activities like walking on the beach, swimming, hiking, cycling, paddle boarding, or exploring a new city on foot.

The goal isn't to burn calories—it's to move your body while enjoying yourself.

Remember: Rest Is Productive

Many people feel guilty when they aren't constantly busy.

Don't.

Your body needs recovery just as much as it needs exercise. When you combine smart training with proper rest, you build strength, improve energy, reduce injury risk, and create a healthier lifestyle that you can maintain for years.

So this vacation season, give yourself permission to unplug, unwind, and recharge.

You may discover that sometimes doing a little less is exactly what helps you achieve much more.

anything mankind has had to deal with.

In many respects, despite its unfathomable potential, AI is still in its developmental stages, and those latching on to what they see as its advantages are still early adopters.

A central global issue with the initial explosion of AI across all sectors and its potential for exponential expansion is regulation.

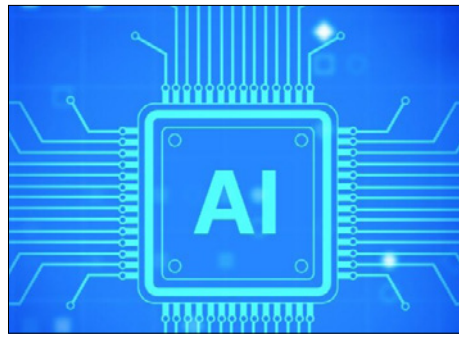

Governments throughout the world are now being forced to catch up with the pace at which the technology is expanding and being adopted.

UK CONTEMPLATES

The UK does not have any AI-specific regulation or legislation covering AI as a technology. Instead, AI is regulated in the context in which it is used, through existing legal frameworks, such as financial services legislation.

According to the UK's Parliamentary Hansard, some regulators, however, have oversight of the development, implementation, and use of AI more broadly. For example, the Information Commissioner's Office (the UK's independent body established to uphold information rights) has guidance on its website covering AI and data protection and explaining decisions made with AI. The UK also uses non-statutory principles for AI governance and targeted legislation. This includes the Online Safety Act 2023, which empowers Ofcom to regulate online services, including AI chatbots.

In a 2023 AI white paper (consultation paper), the then Conservative Government under Rishi Sunak proposed that AI would continue to be overseen by existing regulators covering specific sectors, such as Ofcom (the UK's communications regulator) and Ofgem (Great Britain's energy regulator).

This context-based approach to regulation was favoured by the government, and preferred to a single regulatory function and uniform rules for governing AI.

By 2024, the Labour government, then under recently resigned prime minister Keir Starmer, said that "most AI systems should be regulated at the point of use" and that "existing expert regulators are best placed to do this". The Labour government had signalled in its 2024 election manifesto, and in the 2024 King's Speech, that it would introduce "binding regulation on the handful of companies developing the most powerful AI models" to ensure their safe development. Legislation, however, has not yet been forthcoming.

The government has published several AI-related policies, including the AI Opportunities Action Plan. AI policies have mainly focused on boosting the AI sector, and promoting innovation in and adoption of AI to help drive growth and productivity across the UK economy.

Currently, the new Labour government under new prime minister Andy Burnham has indicated that it would consider regulating advanced AI models if its current voluntary system for testing them before deployment no longer proved sufficient to protect the public.

In an interview with the Reuters news agency, the UK's AI Minister, Kanishka Narayan, said the government sees AI as a driver of economic growth and has sought to position Britain as one of the world's leading destinations for AI investment. Britain is the European leader in AI funding and start-ups.

"If the right mechanism and lever changes in time and it feels like regulation might be a way that helps us do that, of course, we will look at it," he said in an interview with Reuters.

The UK doesn't presently have an agency charged specifically with regulating AI but relies on existing agencies and legislation.

US WAITS

The United States also doesn't have an AI-specific regulatory agency, but President Trump has said his administration is considering the matter in the wake of recent cybersecurity hacking breaches, notably against several major companies.

"We're looking at AI, we're looking at controls, we're also making sure that we lead," the American president stated.

EU MOVES

While the US is at the forefront of the AI revolution, the European Union, which is also establishing its own AI footprint, is moving faster in the area of regulation.

Just this week, the EU announced the implementation of its new AI Act, intended to place AI activities under strict control, but which at the same time is meant to facilitate the development of the technology.

AI companies in the EU are now required to clearly label chatbots, deepfakes, and other AI-generated content. Compliance will be closely monitored with severe penalties.

CALYPSO CONTEXT CONTEXT

In the Caribbean, the concern about the impact of AI in the arts, particularly calypso competitions, has become a matter of concern for organisers.

In typical Caribbean calypso competition style, the issue has become the topic of a witty, yet serious calypso with Chrystal Beckles of Barbados tackling the issue head-on in her song 'AI Gine Win De Crown (AI is going to win the crown)'.

This time though, neither AI nor Chrystal won the Barbados Calypso crown. It went to the singer AC (Adrian Clarke) with his hit Legends From the Grave.

ELDER TREASURES: A commentary

A quietly emerging trend in the Cayman Islands is slowly but certainly making its presence felt...and seen...and heard.

It might now be emerging, but it has always been trending in the background. That issue is the place and power of pensioners in society.

Elsewhere in the world, pensioner power is both an economic and political force that governments and political parties have no alternative but to take seriously.

It's no different in Cayman.

Pensioner power comes not only from accumulated earnings from a lifetime of service, especially in the civil service. Equally important is the lifetime of work experience, where skills that built, managed, and ran offices, businesses, professions, and even sectors of the economy remain a resource still available to be tapped. Regrettably, in many instances, despite their availability, this treasure trove of experience, skills and professionalism is being overlooked.

The issue, as it has been explained to Caymanian Times, is not about competing in the job market, especially with graduates and other Caymanians. Who wants to compete with their children and grandchildren for a job anyway?

However, rather than feeling that 'they have been put out to pasture' - even with the heaps of awards and other recognitions bestowed on them - the plea of many pensioners is to 'stay involved'.

And there are practicalities to that which benefit both the concerned pensioners, the wider society - and the economy.

Whether it's a few days of paid or volunteered availability, training in a new skill-set, or even setting up a small business providing administrative or other support remotely or on-location, the pensioner power is a resource to be tapped into...for those who wish to.

Proud Caymanians pay their own way. Reliance on welfare is not the Cayman way. Leisure has its limitations, and in many instances many pensioners wish to stay involved.

For example, consider the cost of healthcare and health insurance. Despite the welcome government initiatives to broaden the scope of coverage, some pensioners would still fall just outside the safety net.

Then, consider the cost of living. Personal finances already under stress can only be cut back so far back, and relying on relatives - reluctantly - often results in not just easing the burden in one way but spreading and intensifying in another direction. However, many of our 'elder treasures' are ready, willing, able and available to fill gaps in the workforce...within reason. They ask for a hand up, not just a handout.

It's something to be looked at.

Our elders are our treasures, and treasures have value.

The Final Chapter: An Epilogue of Reflection, Renewal, and Hope

The sixteenth and final chapter of Bodden's book- Deconstructing Development (Immigration, Society and Economy in the Early 21st Century Cayman), serves as its epilogue. More than a conclusion, an epilogue invites readers to step back and reflect on the broader significance of everything that has gone before. It asks the reader to consider what all that has been discussed and examined before means – for the reader, for the society, for moving forward. Where should the society go from here? It is, in a sense, Bodden's final conversation with the reader before closing the book.

Entitled "Un-Silencing the Past, Interpreting the Present and Charting the Future," the epilogue brings together the major themes developed throughout the book and argues that many of the Cayman Islands' present challenges can only be understood by examining the historical forces that shaped modern Caymanian society. The book has argued that the tensions surrounding immigration, identity, land ownership, economic development, and governance did not emerge suddenly but have evolved over decades as the islands were transformed by globalization, tourism, financial services, and rapid population growth.

The chapter begins by "un-silencing the past." It revisits the observations of earlier thinkers such as Andrew Morris Gerrard and Ulf Hannerz, both of whom warned that rapid modernization and uncontrolled development would fundamentally alter Caymanian society. Their concerns about excessive materialism, the sale of land, large-scale immigration, and the long-term consequences of economic growth are presented as remarkably relevant to many of the issues confronting the Cayman Islands today. Readers would have noted Bodden's high regard for Gerrard's early observations, and predictions.

From there, the discussion turns to the present. One of the book's central arguments, readers might recall, is that modern Cayman is best understood as existing within a duality, what the author describes as "paradise" and "the plantation." Paradise represents the world of tourism, international finance, foreign investment, and considerable prosperity. The plantation symbolizes the lived experience of many ordinary Caymanians and lower-income workers who struggle with rising housing costs, limited access to land, increasing inequality, and the pressures created by rapid demographic change. The chapter argues that these contrasting realities now exist side by side and have become one of the defining features of contemporary Caymanian society.

The epilogue also reflects upon the unintended consequences of economic success. Readers will recall that this theme laid the basis on several of the earlier chapters. While acknowledging that globalization and development brought unprecedented prosperity, it argues that they also produced serious challenges, including dependence on imported labour, escalating property prices, environmental pressures, infrastructure deficiencies, and widening social inequality. These developments have raised important questions about who ultimately benefits from economic growth and how that growth can be made more inclusive and sustainable.

Education, family life, and public policy receive particular attention. The author contends that a society's long-term strength depends not only upon economic performance but also upon the quality of its schools, the stability of its families, the opportunities available to its young people, and the willingness of political leaders to confront difficult issues honestly. The chapter revisits earlier discussions concerning youth development, social fragmentation, crime, affordable housing, immigration policy, and national planning, arguing that these challenges require coordinated and forward-looking solutions rather than short-term responses.

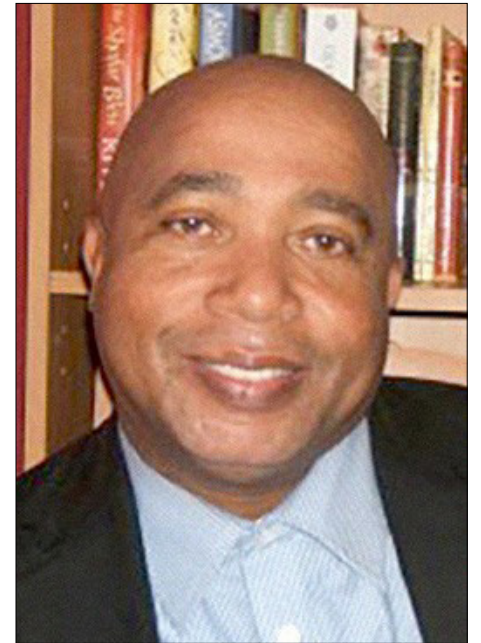

Finally, the epilogue turns toward the future. Rather than ending on a pessimistic note, Bodden argues that the Cayman Islands stands at an important crossroads. The author calls for stronger governance, better educational outcomes, thoughtful immigration policies, improved infrastructure, greater political accountability, and renewed commitment to protecting Caymanian identity while remaining open to the opportunities of a global economy. The future, the chapter suggests, will depend upon balancing economic success with social justice, national cohesion, and responsible stewardship of the country's resources.

As the final chapter of the book, the epilogue serves as both a reflection and a challenge. It reminds readers that history is not simply about understanding the past but about informing the future. The central message is that while the Cayman Islands has achieved remarkable economic success, its greatest task now is to ensure that prosperity is accompanied by social cohesion, fairness, and a shared national vision. The book therefore closes not with final answers, but with an invitation for continued dialogue about the kind of Caymanian society future generations should inherit.

With this article, we reach the end of a journey that has taken readers through each of the sixteen chapters of this book. These summaries were intended to encourage wider public reading and appreciation of the work of local authors; and to stimulate thoughtful conversation and reflection on the issues they that continue to shape the Cayman Islands. Throughout the series we have explored our history, culture, economy, politics, education, immigration, social development, governance, and national identity. My hope has been that these brief summaries would provide readers with a window into the broader arguments of the book and stimulate thoughtful discussion about the challenges and opportunities facing our country.

Every book is, in some sense, an invitation to conversation. This one is no exception. I do not believe that it claims to provide the final word on the Cayman Islands. There should be no expectation that every reader will agree with every conclusion. Rather, the book seeks to contribute to an informed national dialogue by bringing together history, research, public policy, and personal reflection in the hope of encouraging deeper understanding of who we are, how we arrived at this point in our national development, and what kind of society we wish to build for future generations.

As I pointed out several times, these summaries were not intended as critique of the book, its themes and conclusions. That would be a different undertaking. If these weekly summaries have encouraged readers to think more deeply about our country's past, engage more thoughtfully with its present, or participate more actively in shaping its future, then they will have served their purpose. Ultimately, that has been the larger objective of both this newspaper series and the book itself: to contribute, however modestly, to a stronger, more reflective, and more confident Cayman Islands.

Future Cayman Talent Celebrated at Annual Internship Luncheon

The Maples Group brings together interns and scholarship recipients for an afternoon focused on stewardship, opportunity and professional growth.

George Town, Cayman Islands: The Maples Group celebrated its 2026 Summer Internship Programme at its annual Internship Luncheon on 30 July 2026, bringing together 35 interns and 22 scholarship recipients with supervisors, mentors, colleagues from across the Group and government representatives.

Speakers at the luncheon highlighted the importance of approaching each new opportunity with humility, ambition and a sense of stewardship. Whether beginning an internship, starting as an articulated clerk or taking on a new professional milestone, students were encouraged to “remember day one”, work hard, treat others well and look for ways to create room for more Caymanians to succeed.

As a flagship moment within the summer internship, the luncheon provided a dedicated forum for students to share perspectives, hear from leaders and build connections across the private and public sectors. The event also reinforced the purpose of the programme: to provide young Caymanians with meaningful access to professional experience, mentorship and networks that support their confidence, growth and long-term career development.

The annual summer initiative welcomes students with a wide range of interests, backgrounds and career aspirations. Participants gain a well-rounded view of the wider Group through placements across departments including IT, Legal, AML, Funds Fiduciary, Human Resources, Marketing and Accounting.

Business services participation evolves each year in line with organisational needs, giving interns insight into the collaborative nature of the business and the role each function plays in delivering client service excellence. Alongside their placements, interns take part in workshops designed to strengthen professional confidence and practical skills.

Michael Richardson, Managing Partner of the Group’s Cayman Islands law firm, said: “Programmes like this are an important part of how we support the next generation of Cayman Islands professionals. By giving students access to meaningful experience, mentorship and exposure to a wide range of career pathways, we help them build confidence, understand where their strengths may lead and see how they can contribute to the wider success of the profession and community.”

Community engagement is also an important part of the student experience. Each cohort participates in a dedicated Community Service Day, alongside group projects that promote teamwork, research and presentation skills. and professional delivery.

At the Luncheon, Hon. Rolston M. Anglin, Minister for Finance & Economic Development and Minister for Education & Training, spoke to the importance of corporate social responsibility and work-life balance, reinforcing the value of investing not only in professional development, but also in the wider wellbeing of young Caymanians and the communities they will help shape.

Scholarship recipients also shared reflections on the impact of receiving support beyond financial assistance from the Maples Group. They spoke about the confidence that comes from knowing others recognise their potential and believe in their ability to take the next step. As one recipient reflected during the luncheon, “The ones who make room for you don’t always know how much they change your life.”

Another key component of the internship experience is networking. Interns connect with professionals across the organisation and wider community through initiatives such as the CareerMasters FutureFlex Conference, CIMA Student Mixer, interactive panel discussions and fireside chats with legal professionals. These opportunities give students practical insight into the pathways available to both legal and non-legal talent.

Jonathon Meloy, member of the Early Careers Committee, added: “When students are given the opportunity to see the bigger picture, they are better placed to understand where their interests, strengths and ambitions may lead. That perspective is an important part of helping them make confident decisions about their future and recognise the role they can play in opening doors for others.”

The Maples Group’s collaboration with the Portfolio of the Civil Service further strengthens its connection to public sector talent development, creating opportunities for Cayman Islands Government scholars to participate as part of the internship cohort. This reflects the organisation’s broader commitment to community partnership and developing future talent in the Cayman Islands.

These reflections underscored the Maples Group’s continued commitment to supporting future Cayman Islands talent through practical work experience, mentorship, community engagement and skills-based learning. The programme helps students build the confidence, capability and professional networks needed to take their next steps with purpose.

Legal Services internships are offered during the summer, while Financial Services internship placements are available year-round. For more information, including application details, please visit the Students & Graduates section of the Maples Group Careers page.

MRCU Continues Response As Seasonal Mosquito Numbers Remain Elevated

Elevated tides have repeatedly pushed water into large areas of low-lying wetland, including locations that may remain dry for extended periods. This creates ideal conditions for large numbers of dormant mosquito eggs to hatch at approximately the same time.

GRAND CAYMAN, Cayman Islands (4 August 2026) – The Mosquito Research and Control Unit (MRCU) continues extensive mosquito control operations as biting mosquito numbers remain higher than the Unit considers acceptable in several areas of Grand Cayman.

MRCU's surveillance data confirm a significant seasonal increase. Preliminary figures for 2026 show a year-to-date average of approximately 40 mosquitoes per trap night, compared with approximately 29 in 2025. However, this remains below the average recorded in 2023, when the figure was approximately 57 mosquitoes per trap night, as well as several of Cayman's more severe historical years.

Daily trap collections also show separate waves of mosquito activity. The highest daily total recorded during the past 180 days exceeded 9,000 mosquitoes in June. Numbers subsequently declined before rising again in July, when a daily total of more than 5,000 mosquitoes was recorded.

These figures demonstrate that current mosquito activity is significant, but not unprecedented. They also show how numbers can rise and fall quickly as different sections of wetland are flooded and separate generations of mosquitoes emerge.

Trap data are one of several tools MRCU uses to guide operations. Teams also consider field inspections, biting activity, tidal conditions, rainfall, weather forecasts and the results of previous treatments when determining where and when operations should take place.

Tidal flooding driving current activity

Much of the mosquito activity experienced this season is linked to extensive tidal flooding across Cayman's wetlands.

Elevated tides have repeatedly pushed water into large areas of low-lying wetland, including locations that may remain dry for extended periods. This creates ideal conditions for large numbers of dormant mosquito eggs to hatch at approximately the same time.

The primary mosquito responsible for the current emergence is Aedes taeniorhynchus, commonly known as the black salt marsh mosquito. This species lays its eggs in damp wetland soil rather than directly on the surface of the water. The eggs can remain dormant for months or longer while waiting for the area to flood.

When tides or heavy rainfall cover the eggs with water, they hatch and the mosquitoes begin developing in the flooded wetlands. Several days later, large numbers can emerge within a relatively short period.

Aedes taeniorhynchus is a very aggressive biter and a strong flyer. Mosquitoes emerging from the wetlands can travel several miles into surrounding residential and commercial areas.

When this species is present in high numbers, the mosquitoes also tend to shelter during the day in shrubs, vegetation and other shaded locations. As a result, daytime biting can increase, particularly around gardens, trees, hedges and other shaded areas.

While this species is not known to transmit human disease locally, it can transmit heartworm disease to dogs and cats. Pet owners are therefore encouraged to ensure their animals remain protected through appropriate heartworm prevention.

Cayman has extensive natural wetlands where this mosquito breeds. Across these habitats, the number of dormant eggs can reach into the trillions. This means that even after extensive preventative treatment, a relatively small percentage surviving can still result in a noticeable emergence.

Videos showing some of the tidal flooding currently affecting Cayman's wetlands can be viewed on MRCU's social media pages.

Prevention does not mean zero mosquitoes

MRCU carries out extensive larviciding to reduce mosquito populations before they emerge. These treatments prevent enormous numbers of mosquitoes from reaching the adult stage, but no mosquito control programme can reach every egg or treat every section of Cayman's vast and environmentally sensitive wetlands.

There will always be seasonal periods when mosquitoes emerge, regardless of the proactive work carried out by MRCU. This is a natural consequence of living in a tropical coastal environment with extensive wetland habitat, and it is not unique to the Cayman Islands.

Similar seasonal emergences occur in coastal communities around the world. What distinguishes Cayman is the scale and sophistication of the mosquito control programme developed here over several decades.

Before organised mosquito control, mosquito populations regularly disrupted outdoor activity, daily life and Cayman's development. Today, MRCU operates an advanced programme that includes mosquito surveillance, scientific research, larviciding, aircraft operations, truck fogging, resistance monitoring and public education.

Without these interventions, the mosquito numbers produced by major tidal flooding events would be considerably higher.

Numerous operations continue

MRCU has carried out numerous aerial and ground-based mosquito control operations in recent weeks, alongside daily surveillance, field inspections and preventivative treatments.

Some residents have questioned why they may not see the aircraft or truck foggers operating in their area every night. While members of the public may not personally observe every operation, work continues across multiple sections of MRCU each day.

A treatment in a particular area also does not mean that the same area can or should be treated again the following night. All mosquito control products must be used strictly in accordance with their approved labels. Depending on the product and type of treatment, the label may require an interval of several days between applications.

Following these requirements helps protect people, wildlife and the wider environment.

MRCU must also carefully manage how frequently different products are applied. Using the same product too often can increase the risk of mosquitoes developing resistance, potentially making that product less effective over time.

Effective mosquito control therefore requires a careful balance between responding to current biting levels, following product labels, protecting the environment and preserving the long-term effectiveness of the products available.

Temporary drone programme setback

MRCU has experienced a setback with its application drone programme and currently has no application drones available for mosquito control.

While this temporarily limits one of the treatment methods available to the Unit, it has not interrupted MRCU's wider mosquito control programme. Aircraft operations, truck fogging, larviciding, surveillance and field activities continue, while work is underway to restore application drone capability for future operations.

Operations will continue

MRCU recognises the frustration caused by the current biting levels and is not satisfied with mosquito numbers remaining above acceptable levels.

Teams will continue monitoring mosquito populations and adjusting operations based on surveillance results, tidal activity, weather conditions and the effectiveness of previous treatments.

Residents are encouraged to use an effective mosquito repellent, particularly around sunrise and sunset and when spending time near shaded vegetation. They should also maintain window and door screens and ensure dogs and cats remain protected against heartworm.

Operational information, videos of the wetland flooding and links to MRCU's social media channels are available at linktr.ee/CaymanMRCU.

MRCU appreciates the public's patience and understanding as teams continue working to bring seasonal mosquito numbers back to more acceptable levels.

UNDERSTANDING OUR SEASONAL MOSQUITO SURGE

Tidal flooding in our wetlands leads to higher mosquito numbers.
MRCU is working every day to keep numbers down.

THE CAUSE

Black salt marsh mosquitoes lay their eggs in damp soil. During this time of year, tides are higher than at other times. As the tides rise and fall, they reach areas with large numbers of eggs waiting for water to activate them and start the life cycle. This can trigger large mosquito emergences several days later.

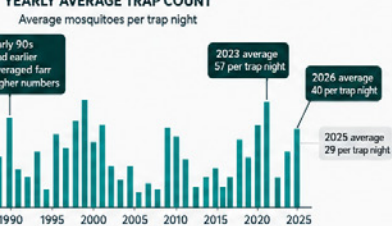

Aedes taeniorhynchus Black Salt Marsh Mosquito

- Very aggressive bite and strong flyer
- Does not transmit disease to humans.
- Can transmit heartworm disease to dogs and cats
- Shelters in shrubs and shaded areas – daytime biting can increase, especially around gardens, trees and other shaded areas

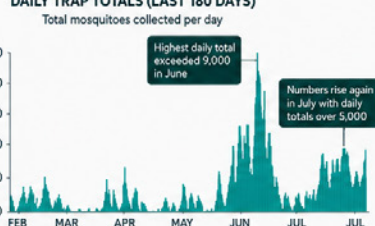

WHAT OUR SURVEILLANCE DATA SHOWS

YEARLY AVERAGE TRAP COUNT

2026 numbers are elevated, but below recent peak years such as the early 1990s and 2023.

DAILY TRAP TOTALS (LAST 180 DAYS)

Separate waves of activity occur as different areas flood and new generations emerge.

PREVENTION DOES NOT MEAN ZERO MOSQUITOES

Treatments prevent billions of mosquitoes, but some will always emerge when conditions are right.

FOLLOWING THE LABEL PROTECTS US ALL

We follow product labels and wait the required number of days between treatments to protect people, wildlife and the environment.

STOPPING RESISTANCE SAVES OUR TOOLS

Using products responsibly helps keep them effective for the long term.

DRONE PROGRAMME TEMPORARILY UNAVAILABLE

We currently have no available agricultural drones. All routine operations continue while we work to restore this capability.

FIFA FINDS OUT

In Cayman, across the Caribbean, and throughout the football world and beyond, the latest unfolding drama which has engulfed FIFA (Fédération Internationale de Football Association/International Federation of Association Football) is a spectacle that is playing out beyond the football field and into the boardroom of the world's preeminent football governing body.

Once again, FIFA, which has over recent years been trying to shelve a once-tarnished reputation, finds itself in the headlines and spotlight for the wrong reasons, facing a series of 'red cards' - and resignations from within its own membership over its current leadership.

Central to what some regard as the latest series of missteps is its current president, Gianni Infantino over his much-discredited plan - which it has now abandoned - to sell a stake in future World Cup profits to investors in a financial scheme headed by Joshua Kushner. He is the brother of Jared Kushner, the son-in-law of the American president Donald Trump, who is also Trump's foreign policy advisor and negotiator.

INFANTINO APOLOGISES FOR FIFA'S FIASCO

Following an urgent meeting on Wednesday, embattled president Infantino, under mounting pressure to quit over his much-discredited plan, issued an apology.

"We acknowledge that errors were also made after the proposal was leaked to media," he wrote in the co-signed statement with FIFA's Secretary General Mattias Grafstrom.

"We sincerely apologise for these errors and commit to them not happening again. With this in mind, we will conduct a necessary review, and a report will be presented to the FIFA Council at its next scheduled meeting."

It has been noted that Mr Grafstrom, who had previously appeared to be sceptical of his boss's failed plan, was also a signatory to the apology.

BLASTED BY BURNHAM

The rejection of Mr Infantino's investment plan has been swift, extensive and severe. Among those leading the call for him to quit or be thrown out of the top job is the new British Prime Minister, Andy Burnham. In remarks that cut to the core of FIFA's current leadership troubles, Mr Burnham declared his lack of confidence in Mr Infantino's leadership in an interview with the UK's Sky Sports.

"I do not believe that he is the right man to lead football forward on the world stage," the British Prime Minister declared, adding, "The plan that was put forward was offensive to many football people around the world, and it can't be the case that we move on and forget that. It wasn't acceptable."

The British Football Association (FA), its European counterpart the European UEFA (Union of European Football Associations), as well as the Caribbean and Americas CONCACAF (Confederation of North, Central America and Caribbean Association Football) and many other global FIFA affiliates have expressed the displeasure - some disgust - at the Infantino proposal.

► Gianni Infantino FIFA president

Some major media outlets have been reporting that efforts by the beleaguered FIFA president to seek the intervention of President Trump have not been successful, with suggestions that he is being cold-shouldered. Mr Infantino himself is reported to have stated that he felt "isolated".

FIFA'S FINANCIAL FUMBLE

As explained by FIFA, "If approved, football development in every corner of the world would benefit immediately from increased funding available to all 211 FIFA Member Associations (MAs): (i) An optional USD 20 million per MA in exceptional and immediate funding for special projects from the new FIFA Fast Forward Programme (FFFP), (ii) USD 20 million per MA in Forward funding for 2027-2030 (currently budgeted USD 8 million), (iii) USD 22 million per MA in Forward funding for 2031-2034, and (iv) USD 24 million per MA in Forward funding for 2035-2038."

The global football governing body said this would be achieved via FIFA Forward Enterprise (FFE), a new FIFA-owned and controlled subsidiary consolidating FIFA's commercial and event operations; FIFA would retain sole control of FFE and exclusive authority over football governance, competitions, match calendar, and all regulatory and sporting decisions.

It projected that FFE would raise up to USD 4.2 billion later this year to fund FFFP, based on an initial equity valuation of USD 20 billion by carefully selecting long-term investors who will purchase minority, non-controlling interests in FFE. All net benefits of FFE will be reinvested back into football worldwide.

FIFA did say that "in full respect of FIFA's democratic and governance principles, the launch of this new structure is subject to the support of a majority of MAs and the relevant approvals of the FIFA Council."

That plan has now been widely rejected, with Mr Infantino's position at the head of FIFA still uncertain despite his apology.

He is up for re-election next year with pressure mounting on him to step down.

BVI GOVT PROBES QUESTIONABLE INVESTMENT

The British Virgin Islands government has launched a major investigation into how state funds were invested in a Jamaican investment firm currently caught up in a series of criminal proceedings in Jamaica. Questions abound in the BVI over how government money ended up in Delta Capital Partners' investment portfolio and who authorised the transaction. The investment amount is said to be US$2.5 million.

The BVI Premier, Dr Natalio Wheatley - who is the territory's Minister of Finance - has said he had no prior knowledge of the matter until it was brought to his attention.

According to the Premier, the transaction was in violation of the territory's Public Finance Management Act. "The Public Finance Management Act requires any investment of public funds to be approved by the Minister of Finance, and the investment made from the former Accountant General, Arnold Ainsley, in Delta Capital Ltd was made outside of my knowledge and approval."

► Premier Wheatley BVI

The Premier also declared: "There must be accountability for any wrongdoing, and I am making sure that the right steps are being taken to prevent this from happening again," and admitted, "We recognise that that's a failing within the Ministry of Finance."

The BVI's Financial Investigation Agency is conducting the local arm of the probe, while in Jamaica, where Delta Capital Partners is headquartered, the company is at the centre of an investigation by Jamaica's Financial Investigations Division, which has resulted in charges linked to the collapse of the Jamaican investment firm Stocks and Securities Limited (SSL).

SSL, which was managed by Delta Capital, hit the global headlines in 2023 over a scandal surrounding its handling of an investment portfolio for the legendary Jamaican athlete Usain Bolt from which millions went missing.

Company officials of both Delta Capital Partners and SSL have been charged with breaching Jamaica's banking and securities laws. That matter is still before the courts.

POLICE NEWS

Police Respond to Two-Vehicle Collision in Cayman Brac

Shortly before 11:30AM on Monday, 27 July, police and other emergency services responded to a two-vehicle collision involving a motorcycle and a Honda Stream on Creek Road in Cayman Brac.

It is reported that the Honda Stream had a collision with a motorcycle travelling west along Creek Road in the vicinity of Ivory Lane. The motorcycle sustained extensive damage, while the Honda Stream sustained minor damage to its right front side.

Both drivers involved in the collision were attended to by emergency services and transported to Faith Hospital for treatment.

The motorcycle rider, who is believed to have sustained serious but non-life-threatening injuries, was subsequently airlifted to Grand Cayman for further medical treatment. He is reported to be in stable condition.

The driver of the Honda Stream was breath tested, which returned a negative result, and the driver was warned for intended prosecution for the offence of careless driving.

The collision remains under investigation by the RCIPS.

Police Respond to Single-Vehicle Collision on Shamrock Road

On Sunday, 26 July, shortly after 5:00PM, police and emergency services responded to a report of a single-vehicle collision involving a silver BMW on Shamrock Road in George Town.

It is reported that the vehicle was traveling westbound when it left the roadway and collided with a utility pole.

The driver, observed as unconscious, was attended to by emergency services before being transported to the Anthony S. Eden Hospital and treated for non-life-threatening injuries.

Anyone believed to have observed the collision is being encouraged to call the George Town Police Station at 949-4222.

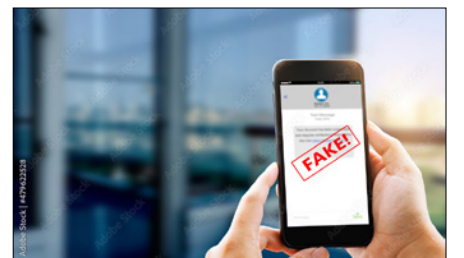

Police Investigate Online Vehicle Spoofing Scam

Police are investigating reports of a scam that involves individuals posing as used-car dealers.

It is reported that the individuals are running advertisements on Facebook claiming to represent companies selling used vehicles from Japan. Interested parties are asked to make contact with the seller via WhatsApp, who uses false names such as "Anthony Daniels" or "Ahmed", and mobile numbers which appear to originate in Pakistan. A number of individuals reportedly lost money as a result of the scam.

Members of the public are urged to exercise caution when purchasing vehicles online and to verify the legitimacy of the seller before making any payment.

Members of the public are also reminded to conduct business with only established dealers with verifiable business details, including a physical address, official website and telephone number.

Detectives are encouraging anyone who has made contact with the seller to make a report at the nearest police station.

The matter remains under police investigation.

Police Investigate Single Vehicle Collision on Esterley Tibbetts Highway

The driver was also breath-tested at the scene and subsequently arrested on suspicion of DUI.

The matter is currently under investigation.

Cayman Islands Men’s National Team set for League B challenge at Concacaf Nations League

The Cayman Islands Men's National Team (CIMNT) has been drawn into Group A of League B for the 2026-27 Concacaf Nations League, where it will face Guyana, Puerto Rico and Dominica in the competition that also serves as qualification for the 2027 Concacaf Gold Cup.

The draw marks Cayman's first League B appearance after earning promotion from League C during the previous Nations League cycle. The achievement represented another important milestone for the national program, with the team now set to compete against higher-ranked opposition as it continues its development.

"Earning promotion to League B was a significant achievement for this group, but we've always viewed it as the beginning of the next step rather than the destination," CIMNT Head Coach Dougie Rowe said. "We'll be facing quality opposition, and that's exactly the type of football our players need. Every match will demand discipline, resilience and belief, and we're looking forward to the opportunity to continue proving ourselves at this level."

League B features 16 teams divided into four groups of four. Teams will play each opponent home and away for a total of six matches during the FIFA international windows in September, October and November 2026. The winner of each group advances to the inaugural Concacaf Nations League B Finals and earn promotion to League A. The fourth-place team in each group will be relegated to League C.

The fifth edition of the Concacaf Nations League includes all 41 Concacaf member associations and serves as the qualification pathway to the 2027 Concacaf Gold Cup. League A features 16 teams, League

B consists of 16 teams and League C includes nine teams.

Antonelli may stall on final straight

Andrea Kimi Antonelli leads the 2026 Formula One standings as the season reached the summer break. But will he still be there at the end?

Antonelli has largely escaped any second year problems, except for the occasional reliability issue, to stamp his claim for the F1 drivers' championship. The Mercedes ace has amassed 219 points, as well as six wins in 11 rounds.

Incredibly, the Italian teenager took his first five career Grand Prix wins in a row between rounds two and six. A battery failure in Barcelona put an end to Antonelli's early dominance, as Ferrari's Lewis Hamilton instead scored his first win after Antonelli's threat fell away.

Ferrari have seen a reborn Hamilton hit the grid thanks to the end of F1's ground-effect era, with the 2026 regulations far more in line with his preferred driving style. Hamilton may yet return to the summit in 2026, too, although 50 points behind as Antonelli's main title rival.

So far Antonelli, Hamilton and possibly McLaren's Lando Norris – who won the last Grand Prix in Hungary – have been the best drivers.

F1's 2026 regulations have also suited Antonelli's driving style far more than his teammate, George Russell, which has played a key role in the disparity between the Silver Arrows stars this season. Norris falls into a similar pattern in his battle with Oscar Piastri at McLaren.

Piastri has struggled to adapt to the 2026 regulations, whereas Norris is able to extract the performance from his car when the rear end slides. The big issue for Norris is that McLaren did not adapt to the regulations as well as the likes of Mercedes, Ferrari and even Red Bull.

Still, while McLaren have often gone from having the third or fourth-fastest car on the grid, which has meant Norris' chance to retain the F1 title has been non-existent, he is driving at an extremely high level and is in control of his battle with Piastri.

Even before McLaren's upgrades helped Norris win the Hungarian GP from pole,

► Antonelli is only 19 and still inexperienced partly helped by Carlos Sainz impeding Piastri, he has shone. Norris scored Sprint pole in Miami and could have also won the Miami GP if Antonelli had not undercut him. So Antonelli still looks likely to win it, but inexperience and pressure may affect him. Norris looks the better candidate to last the course.

Spain look certain to dominate at all levels

► The Spain women are world champs too

Spain winning another international tournament has become an annual occurrence. Last month alone, in Wrexham, Sarajevo and New Jersey, the outcome was the same: they were champs again.

Ferran Torres' 106th-minute winner against Argentina in the World Cup final in the United States crowned another golden summer for Spanish football. It followed success at the men's U19 European Championship in Wales and the women's U19 European Championship in Bosnia-Herzegovina. More significantly, it meant Spain became the first-ever nation to hold the men's and women's World Cup titles simultaneously.

Three years ago, Olga Carmona's strike in Sydney earned La Roja a 1-0 win against England and their first Women's World Cup trophy. Torres' goal led to Spain's second men's star.

They also top FIFA's World Ranking. No country can boast that the coaching, player pathways and tactics are so aligned and intertwined.

Surprisingly, Spain's dominance is relatively recent. Prior to the 2000s, they had only won the men's European Championships in 1968, and they frequently disappointed at major tournaments. However, things changed after Euro 2004 with the appointment of Luis Aragonés as head coach. They have since won three of the last five European Championships (2008, 2012, 2024) and two World Cups (2010, 2026) in the men's game, and the women's World Cup in 2023.

There is a consistency to how those players who, across the men's and women's games, have gone on to enjoy so much success.

Biles heads to Peru to big up Pan Ams

Simone Biles is in Peru for the first time to celebrate the one-year countdown to the 2027 Pan American Games in Lima.

Biles is the most decorated artistic gymnast in history. She was named the global ambassador for Lima 2027, as the lead-in to the quadrennial multi-sport spectacle begins.

The Opening Ceremony at the National Stadium of Peru, Lima's iconic Plaza Mayor will host a celebration of sport on Thursday

(6 August), featuring local food, music, and a grand finale.

Lima 2027 officially begins on 23 July 2027, with 16 days of competition across 38 sports featuring over 7,000 athletes. Many events will double as Olympic qualifiers for LA 2028.

"I'm so excited to visit Peru for the first time to celebrate the start of the one-year countdown to the 2027 Pan American Games in Lima," the 29-year-old American said.
